

Dartmouth-Oxford Exchange at Keble College

The Dartmouth-Oxford Exchange Program sends up to four Dartmouth undergraduates per term to University of Oxford's Keble College. As a fully integrated member of the Oxford community, you take courses in the British tutorial system that can count towards your major.

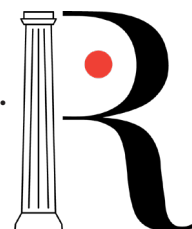

Up to four Dartmouth undergraduates per term may attend Keble College during fall, winter, and spring terms. Please Note - The Keble College Terms run later than Dartmouth College Terms. This potentially can affect the starting dates of summer internships. If you apply and are accepted for Trinity Term (Spring), you must finish the Keble College Term before starting any summer internship.

You will be a fully-integrated member of the Oxford community. You will live on campus, participate in co-curricular and social activities, and take pre-approved politics and economics courses.

The allowed course load at Keble College is two courses taught using the British tutorial system, meaning lots of one-on-one time with the professor and independent study time with only occasional, if any, class meetings.

- Some courses require prerequisites. Please refer to the Keble Guide for this information.
- The program is designed to serve government and economics majors; however, others may apply for consideration on a space available basis.
